ON THE ISTHMUS OF DARIEN

Proposed Canals Discussed Before the Geographic Society.

Mr. Herbert Ogden Relates His Travels and Conclusions Forced Upon Him by Personal Observation.

Mr. Herbert G. Ogden addressed the National Geographic Society last night on "Explorations on the Isthmus of Darien." By way of introduction Mr. Ogden said that the advance press notices had led their readers to imagine that he would treat the subject formally and deal with the history and results of explorations on the isthmus.

treat the subject formaily and deal with the history and results of explorations on the isthmus.

Such was not his intention. His purpose was to tell the society a few of his personal experiences in the work of exploration and survey in the interest of an interactional and interoceanic canal. His experiences dated back thirty years. In 1865 he was a member of a semi-international expedition, the purpose of which was to make surveys with a view to improving the San Juan River and the harbor of Greytown or San Juan dei Norte.

There were two competing companies between New Your and San Francisco, the Pacific Mail, which transferred its freight and passeogers across the isthmus from Colon to Panama, and the Central American Transportation Company, which made the crossing of the isthmus between San Juan del Norte and San Juan del Sur, via the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua. The latter route was the more difficult because of the bars and rapids of the river, and closing in Greytown barbor.

This harbor afforded twenty to twenty-five feet of water and was nearly land-locked. The spit inclosing part of the harbor became so projected that eventually only a narrow channel permitted ingress and egress. Even this little passage had been blockaded by the sinking there of one of the company's steamers. It was to help make this route easier that he first went to Central America.

He told an interesting story of the difficulties which travelers experienced in crossing the country. For sixteen miles above Greytown the river was practically unnavigable during low water. If the passage were made in the bungalows of the matives, the trip was especially tellous and these craft were so unseaworthy that they could not cross the lake, but would skirt round it.

From Virgin Bay, the trip was made on foot, or with the aid of mules or leaves.

round it.

From Virgin Bay, the trip was made on foot, or with the aid of mules or burros. Later, a little steamer crossed the back from Virgin Bay to Torro Rapids, and a still smaller flat bottom steamer followed the river from this point. The present canal plan utilizes the river to the point sixteen miles above Greytown, where the rapids occur and from this point cuts through the country.

miles above Greytown, where the tapids occur and from this point cuts through the country.

At the point of cataracts the river divides, that branch called the Colorado carrying quite a volume of water, even during the dry season. He thought that the piaco where the Colorado entered the Carribean Sea, would make a good harbor. He explained the project which had in view Monkey Point as the eastern terminus of a canal. His second trip to Nicarauga was in 1870, when the first party was sent out to make a survey for the canal.

The expedition was under Commodore Selfridge and consisted of a number of men of the coast survey, mineralogists and telegraphers. He discoursed on the failures and the success of this expedition and of how they had sought to find the path round the mountains indicated by Dr. Cullen.

Mr. Ogden told of the interest which President Grant felt in the canal project. It was an entertaining talk and was listened to by quite a large crowd. It was the opening meeting of the society this season and was presided over by Director Walcott, of the Geologic Survey.
